One of our One World Project schools is in Sweden. The name of the school is Torskolan, and it's in the town of Torsas in the southeastern section of the country. Caroline Elnéus is the students' teacher for this project, and she has been trying something new. Instead of writing to us, her students have been recording messages that she attaches to an e-mail to send. We listen to these messages, and then we write questions that we have for these students. Next, we record messages to send back the same way. The Torskolan students and the La Puente High School students are all English learners. Caroline Elnéus has reported that students who did not want to try to speak English previously are now anxious to have their turn to record a message. This collaboration is making a real difference in the education of the students in both countries.
